Uptake and metabolic pathways of lanthanum in oyster: Implications for the bioaccumulation and biouptake. Three mussels, Perna viridis (Common mussel), Mytilus edulis (Blue mussel), and Mytilus galloprovincialis (Mediterranean mussel), were collected and examined for the concentrations of ¹⁴La, as well as its uptake pathways in shell and soft tissues. Additionally, the activity of the carbonic anhydrase (CA) enzyme in various tissues of both bivalve species was also measured, in order to understand the metabolic pathway of lanthanum. The mussels were exposed in aquarium to artificial seawater with spiked concentration of lanthanum acetate at 0.2 mg L(-1), for 8 days. After the exposure period, the mussels were dissected and the concentrations of the element in different tissues were determined using inductively coupled plasma-mass spectrometry (ICP-MS). The La concentration in the soft tissues of the mussels ranged from
