Another example is to implement a route where the player can choose to trigger an event, or to store a number that is accurate to their gender and trigger a certain dialogue. You have a lot of other options for this, but this is the first way we posted. Let us know what you create! What's new:

Castle Invasion is a browser game that required no download (with the exception of Java, for the initial release). The game has a very simple interface – you click on your Kingdom to allow it to be attacked by a clan of other players. The destination that was picked is highlighted in yellow, as shown in the screenshot below. The battle is initiated when one clan attacks another. I won't describe the details of how it works, but just suffice to say that the attacked is boosted in its power for the period of the battle, which lasts for around 10 turns (the game can be played in either turn-based or real-time settings). During the battle the attackers are allowed to add any amount of buildings, troops, and/or money – the attacked clan only being concerned with how much of their own resources are taken. In the battlescape below, I am standing in my covered only tube opponent's Castle, which is red. I can switch between real time or turn-based play in the game. If I select turn-based the game appears in a window and if I select real time – the window goes away. In addition to being able to play either turn-based or real time, the game includes a number of settings that can be accessed from one of the two game menus. Starting out, you start with your Castle under attack, and only your Castle. If I click on the Z button – I'll get to that later. Game Features There are three main features that can be used in the game: Game is real time – A button at the top of the screen will allow you to change between turn-based and real time views. Instruments – On the left there are a number of quick playing buttons with a number of filters and buttons to display info. Fields – On the right are a number of different informational charts that I haven't used yet. The five drums in the center reveal a number of what look like attack spells. To go to this screen, simply click on the button labeled "A" in the top left of the game screen. But here is where it gets really important to talk about what you can do, and how. On the left are the tools available to the players as they are available in my game. To explain them: Buildings – The larger colored blue circle indicates that if I have that building,
