you know, i get that nbc didnt think this would be a good idea, and the network was probably right. but come on, this is a roast of a man who is so unlikeable it is hard to believe this isnt a satirical take on trump. it appears to be more like a roast of a reality star who is so unlikeable it is hard to believe this isnt a satirical take on trump. theres a lot of dead-eyed, trigger-happy interviews, but there is some weirdly topical humor in the mix, such as hannibal lector and john malkovich roasting donald trump and oprah winfrey giving a speech on the black lives matter movement. it's an easy roast. if you've ever seen the roast show on tv, you know what to expect. the only real "surprises" are the people who appear, and none of them are even remotely surprising. there's a strange and uncomfortable moment when donald trump sits down with oprah winfrey, and not because the two have so little in common (although they have a lot less in common than people think). its one of the few laughs in a sometimes pretty dour roast. which raises the question: why did nbc go ahead and put it on? my theory is that nbc executives figured trump would be a good target for the roast, but they werent 100% sure. but they never thought he would actually show up. and thats a mistake because, even as a roast, this thing isnt very funny. like a roast, it paints a picture of donald trump, but its not a flattering picture. and that meant getting president donald trump on the roasters christmas card. while most of the roasters were already set in their routines for the night, spade knew that the president was sensitive to the possibility of being on the roast, especially considering how the previous year ended. so, with the help of the rest of the roasters, spade created a roast that would stay on message, but also be funny enough to avoid a possible shut down.

Comedy Central Roast Donald Trump Subtitulado

The title of the roasting was The Roast of Donald Trump. All were brought out to the stage one by one and Trump was the last to be roasted. Ive met Donald Trump twice and while I can respect someone who s successful, I cant help but not like him, one of the comedians said. As a liberal, I always feel like I wish I could have a beer with Donald Trump. Id be like, Hey Donald, real quick, you have to admit, you dont really like anyone, right? and he would say, No, really, I s like everyone. Laughter from the crowd. One joked, Youre like a cat, you hate everything, you like everything. Just being cool. Donald, whats up with those weird lights? The host then asked, Will he ever have a baby? A large flash went off and the stage filled with pink light. The audience laughed and Trump smiled, admitting hes on an antidepressant. According to the real-life Trumps longtime lawyer and longtime bookie Michael Cohen, hes not on any meds. I think his advisers want to have kids or Im not sure what it is, the comedian said. Im curious, Im an old guy, whats happening in his 20s? What would you like to take a swing at? That was the main question on the minds of the comedians at the taping of the 2016 Comedy Central Roast of Donald Trump. Yes, thats Donald Trump the billionaire who built a real estate empire, but thats also a real guy, said one. Because thats the thing, are we sitting here, at a TV show, insulting the person who has the most powerful platform in the world, others said. Im actually here, the blonde one added, purposely because I m afraid if Im home, I ll go to jail for punching a wall. It wasnt just Donalds celebrity which brought them to the roast, its his audaciousness. Thats what makes this all so fun to watch and laugh at, comedian Paul Brittain said. Yes, this is a roast and yes, were on a stage but its, quite clearly, the most deadly roast of all time. Because he believes theres a conspiracy against him.
